US MULTIFAMILY REAL ESTATE: THE COMING REFINANCING AND RESTRUCTURING WAVE

Skip to profile content

$757 Billion of Apartment Debt Matures by 2028

The US apartment market faces a substantial refinancing challenge over the next three years. The risk is concentrated among highly leveraged properties acquired during the 2021–2022 investment boom, when interest rates were exceptionally low and property valuations were elevated.

The central issue is not necessarily a collapse in rental demand. It is whether existing property income and valuations can support the refinancing of debt coming due.

According to figures attributed to the Mortgage Bankers Association, approximately $757 billion of US multifamily mortgage debt is scheduled to mature between 2026 and 2028:

- 2026: $297 billion
- 2027: $223 billion
- 2028 $ 237 billion

- ### Maturity Defaults Are Already Evident

  In August 2026, 81% of newly delinquent US commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) balances consisted of non-performing matured balloon loans, according to Trepp data reported by the CRE Finance Council.

  This statistic covers commercial real estate broadly, not exclusively apartments.

US multifamily CMBS delinquencies have more than doubled in two years, rising from 3.33% in September 2024 to 8.04% in September 2026, according to Trepp. For the first time since the pandemic disruption, the multifamily delinquency rate has overtaken the overall commercial mortgage-backed securities rate, which stands at 8.02%.

The deterioration highlights mounting refinancing pressure on apartment owners, particularly those carrying highly leveraged debt originated during the low-interest-rate period. While the figures relate specifically to securitised commercial mortgages rather than the entire apartment again credit is never a problem until it is just anothing item to have in the backl of you mind

a couple of blow ups in real estate and credit moves blows out wider and all of this in part , an unintended consequence of the CAPEX buildout pushing inflation up .
